Hidden Harvest's Seeds of Stability: Food Security as a Foundation for Mental Health, aligned with the RAP Foundation's priorities, addresses a critical and often-overlooked gap: the direct link between food insecurity and mental well-being. For families struggling to meet basic nutritional needs, the constant uncertainty around food access creates chronic stress that negatively impacts emotional health, family stability, and overall quality of life. In the ECV, food insecurity is not only a basic needs issue, but it is also a root cause of poor mental health outcomes.

Access to bilingual, affordable, and disability-informed behavioral health services remains constrained. Caregivers frequently prioritize their child's needs above their own, delaying or forgoing mental health care due to cost, stigma, lack of time, or absence of appropriate providers who understand the unique dynamics of disability within a family system. Without intervention, caregiver burnout can lead to worsening mental health outcomes, family instability, reduced workforce participation, and diminished capacity to support the child's developmental progress. This program provides accessible, bilingual, culturally responsive mental health support for parents and caregivers of children with Intellectual and Developmental Delays ensuring that those who provide daily care are themselves supported, stabilized, and empowered.

Tejiendo Confianza (Weaving Trust) is a culturally rooted mental and emotional wellness initiative led by Danza Azteca Citlaltónac Indigenous Culture Center. This program integrates Indigenous healing practices, advocacy education, and systems navigation to improve awareness of mental health resources while reducing cultural, language, and stigma-related barriers that prevent Latino and Indigenous residents from accessing care. Eastern CV residents, particularly immigrant, mixed-status, farmworker, and Indigenous families, face significant challenges in obtaining culturally responsive mental and emotional health services. Barriers include limited bilingual and culturally responsive providers, transportation gaps, fear connected to immigration enforcement, financial hardship, and deep cultural stigma surrounding mental health support
